“ Mr. Mason was my electronics instructor, during the early core portion of the program at IHCC. The time and place would've been the fall of 1985, and it was at the airport campus. Mr Mason was well known for his tricky true or false tests. It was nearly equivalent to trying to get a base hit off of a great knuckle ball pitcher...No matter how hard you tried, you just couldn't seem to get a base hit out of the infield.

Mr Mason was highly revered, as he was an expert in electronics. I will most remember him as being a talented whistler. He really could whistle and sound like a bird, and you could sometimes hear him whistling as he passed by through the hall. I owe him a lot, and am still involved in electronics as a career.
